FASHION DESIGN | PRESENTATION

You might know the name Jonathan Shaw as belonging to the first tattoo artist to ever appear on The Tonight Show with David Letterman. Or maybe you've seen his likeness depicted by Pulitzer Prize-winning artist Art Spiegelman on the cover of the stately old New Yorker. You might know him as the son of legendary Swing era bandleader Artie Shaw—or maybe the tattooed thug giving Clint Eastwood beef in the movie Tombigo.

You may have seen the magazine Jonathan Shaw founded back in the early '90s, International Tattoo Art, at your local newsstand. Or you might have read his novel, Narcosis: Our Lady of Aches, published by Johnny Depp's HarperCollins imprint, or his recent visual archeological dig into the history of tattoo art, Vintage Tattoo Flash, on Powerhouse Books.

You may have read random excerpts from his ongoing Scab Vendor memoir series online. Or maybe you only remember the name Jonathan Shaw as the infamous "Tattoo Artist to the Stars" who made headline news for being indicted by a New York City Grand Jury and charged with 89 felony counts of illegal weapons possession.

For decades, Jonathan Shaw was a world-famous "celebrity tattoo artist." Over the course of a long, surreal career, he became one of the most infamous and influential tattoo men on the planet. His client list included cops, criminals and captains of industry, along with many famous names. Names like Johnny Depp, The Cure, The Velvet Underground, The Pogues, The Ramones, Marilyn Manson, Jim Jarmusch, Joe Coleman, Johnny Winter, Kate Moss, and the notorious Great Train Robber, Ronald Biggs—not to mention Tupac Shakur and all his bitches. Even Vanilla Ice was lining up for an appointment—much to Shaw's embarrassment—but hey, it was the 90s, right?

Jonathan Shaw is still one of the most respected names in the tattoo profession today—despite having officially retired over 15 years ago from an industry with an absurdly short memory—an industry he was unwittingly pioneering.

While Jonathan may be best known for his long, star-studded career as a world renowned, globetrotting tattoo master, after embarking on a decades-long hiatus from the skin trade, he has worked exclusively as a full-time "scab" vendor. In that capacity, Shaw has published several critically acclaimed works of fiction and memoir, as well as a popular series of highly illustrated museum-quality art books on tattoo history. His writing has been featured in countless international publications, translated into several languages, and optioned for film by Leonardo DiCaprio. A new line of designer fashion clothing featuring Jonathan Shaw's unique, innovative tattoo-inspired artwork and personal brand is currently being launched worldwide.

When not travelling the world, he splits his time between home bases in Rio de Janeiro, New York City, Mexico, and Los Angeles—where a feature length documentary film about his life and times is currently in production.

His motto: "Comforting the disturbed and disturbing the comfortable—since 1953"

Cigano Man

The Cigano man leans his scarred black-iron wasp into another graceful green curve. Another perfect moment, free from the burden of mass and matter and self. Hurting through sunlit time and space, weightless and free, motorcycle and rider are at one with the ride, a total focus in the One, the Holy presence of Now. The humid air seems to flow right through him, filling his bear-up Gypsy soul like a red balloon with a feast of smells, sights, and sounds of the eternal road. This is the only place the Cigano man has ever really wanted to be, the blessed intersection of Here and Now. No past, no future, nothing but the caressing tropical winds of motion and momentum cooling the sweat of his body.

Navigating the highway's narrow black typewriter ribbon, his mind wanders the Eternal Now, contemplating the next adventure. He glances at the bike's oblong mirror. Seeing his image floating before him like a caricature, his devilish goateed grin, gold teeth sparkling in the afternoon light, he starts to laugh, cackling like the crazy little yellow-green parrots darting through the riotous roadside carnival of blurry details and jumbled chingaderas, all winking and whirring in a speeding streamlined cacophony of the senses; a mad carnival of sounds, sights, and colors, flashing details of impossible nameless contraptions and fascinating holy configurations, fabulous bursts of speed and freeze-frame stillness, light, shadow, and motion. Life.

For the Cigano man, God is in the details.

About The Book

The hero of our story is a black Bombay cat, who with her friends, find adventure, friendship and wonderment up on the roof as a contemporary homage to Carole King and Gerry Goffin's timeless classic, "Up On The Roof."

You will definitely want to have this fun, music video-like picture book for the young and young at heart that inspires acceptance, inner peace and listening to those who cannot speak but express everything.
